Mindfulness & Psychotherapy

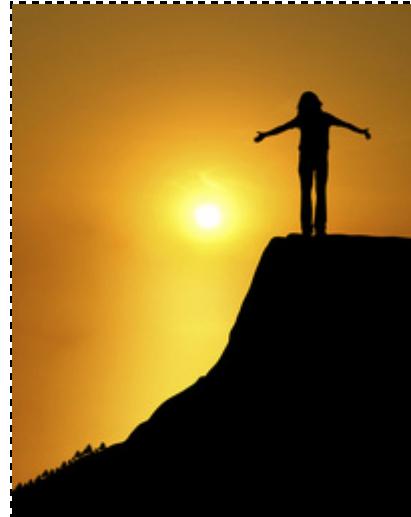

Fall 2014

Dear Julie,

Hope you had a great Thanksgiving! In keeping with the season I'd like to share some recent research that examines the psychological benefits of gratitude.

Some studies find an inverse relationship between gratitude and materialism. The more gratitude we feel, the less we want. We are happier with what we have, less focused on acquiring or consuming more.

- Why are materialists less happy? The role of gratitude and need satisfaction in the relationship between materialism and life satisfaction. Jo-Ann Tsang, et al. Personality and Individual Differences, 2014; 64: 62-66. (link to abstract).
- Is Gratitude an Alternative to Materialism? Polak, E.L. & McDullough, M.E. Journal of Happiness Studies, 2006; 7:343-360. (link to article)

How do we cultivate more gratitude?

- Noticing and pausing when something good happens. So many simple everyday things we can take note of and be grateful for.
- Using a reminder such as "Joyful to have a human life", or "I am so fortunate". I recommend this funny 7 minute video about cultivating gratitude "Confessions of a Jewish Mother: How My Son Ruined My Life!".
- Keeping a gratitude journal is helpful. Here are a couple of popular free apps:
 - Gratitude Diary (iphone)
 - Attitudes of Gratitude Journal (android)

Below is information about my future workshops. Hope to see you in 2015.

Feeling so grateful. Best to you!
Julie
